

List of Morticians & Funeral Homes in Bavaria

Please note that any death occurring in Germany requires the issuance of an official death certificate. If the death occurs in a hospital, the hospital administration will provide an official death certificate. If somebody dies at home or while traveling, a physician must issue a death certificate. The Consulate needs to receive a German death certificate from the local authorities before an English-language certificate of death abroad can be issued.

Your first step will be to contact a local funeral home (= Bestattungsinstitut) as only certified morticians are authorized to receive and handle a body. You must commission a funeral home for help with the paperwork (e.g. German death certificate) and with arrangements for cremation, burial, and/ or the shipment of a body or urn.

The mortician/ funeral director will ask you for (a copy of) your passports, and the deceased's birth and marriage certificate, if applicable. These documents are required by the German registry office in order to issue a death certificate.

Below you will find a list of morticians and funeral homes (i.e. all services are traditionally offered under one roof; hence there is no distinction between mortuaries and funeral homes with the exception of hospitals).
